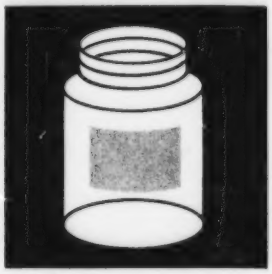
This directory lists businesses and organizations in Saskatchewan that can help us reduce waste by reusing and recycling waste materials

It also provides lots of tips on how to help the environment by following the "4 Rs" — reduce, reuse, recycle and recover — at home.

Environmental Benefits of Reusing and Recycling

- Reusing things requires virtually none of the energy and resources it takes to make new items. You also help reduce pollution and waste disposal problems associated with the manufacturing and transportation processes.
- Recycling aluminum cans saves more than 90 per cent of the energy that would be used to make the cans from raw ore.

- Recycling glass saves 30 per cent of the energy that would be used to make glass with sand. Glass can also be reused numerous times before it's recycled.
- Five recycled PET plastic bottles makes enough fibrefill for a ski jacket.



- Recycling one tonne of paper saves 17 trees and three cubic metres of landfill space. It takes 15 to 60 per cent less water to produce recycled paper.

The "4 Rs"

Our actions today will ensure a safe environment for future generations. You can help by following the "4 Rs" of environmental action:

1) Reduce consumption and waste.

2) Reuse everything you can.

3) Recycle whatever is recyclable in Saskatchewan.

4) Recover beneficial materials from waste, such as compost.

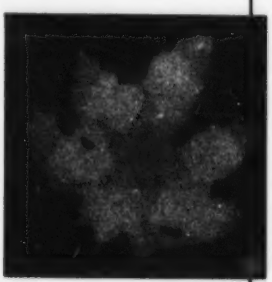
- "Reduce" is first on the list because it is the most effective action we can take. The less we buy, the more resources and energy we save and the less pollution and garbage we create. Reduction can also mean finding alternatives that save resources and reduce pollution, such as use of propane instead of gasoline or baking soda instead of household cleanser.

- "Reuse" is next on the list because by reusing the things we have, we actually reduce consumption and gain similar environmental benefits as with reducing.

- As third on the list, "recycling " is part of the answer not the answer to our environmental problems. Relying on recycling implies that we don't have to change our consumer habits; it means that resources and energy are still used both in the manufacture of the original product and in the recycling process. However, recycling is a way of reducing the impacts of pollution and garbage on the environment, and it helps save resources and energy.

- In many cases, beneficial materials can be "recovered" from waste. For example, silver is often recovered from photographic film, paper and waste water. At home, you can recover valuable nutrients from waste by composting kitchen and yard vegetable waste to make a natural soil conditioner to replace chemical fertilizers.

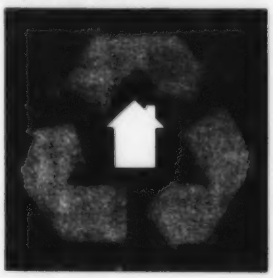


- As we go down the list from reduce to recover, both the cost and possible negative environmental impact increase.

Follow the "4 Rs" at Home

Here are some ways you can take environmental action at home:

- Take a critical look at everything you want to buy. If you're getting along without it now, do you really need the item? Is there something at home you can reuse instead? Can something be repaired or remodelled to take its place? Can something be purchased second-hand instead?



- When you buy something ask yourself: Does it contribute to pollution or waste disposal problems? Will it last? How can I reuse or recycle it?

- Use washable cloth rags, napkins, handkerchiefs and diapers instead of disposables made of paper and/or plastic.

- Avoid buying all disposable products, such as dishes, pans, utensils, cutlery and one-use, disposable plastic razors.

- Avoid buying over-packaged products. Buy in bulk, rather than small quantities. Buy concentrated products.

- Buy soap in bars with minimal wrapping instead of liquid soap in disposable plastic dispensers.
- Remodel or repair rather than buying new. For example, refinish kitchen cupboards rather than install new ones; replace the toaster plug before you buy a new toaster; resole worn shoes to give them new life.
- In clothing, look for classical styles, good quality manufacture and fabric that will last for years.
- Never throw away clothes: repair, remodel or give them away.
- Reduce energy consumption by ensuring that your home is insulated to or above national standards. Also, around the house you can conserve energy by: sealing air leaks, reducing use of hot water, buying energy-efficient appliances and using them efficiently, and turning off lights and electronic equipment when not in use.
- Purchase or make your own less harmful alternatives to home cleaning products, insecticides, herbicides and personal care products.
- Instead of driving, walk, ride a bike, use public transit or car pool to save on energy use and reduce air pollution.
- Recycle whatever you can. In Saskatchewan, we can recycle aluminum, glass and plastic non-refillable beverage containers, most metals, paper, batteries, textiles, glass, rubber and some petroleum products. Recycling outlets are listed on pages 8-29.
- Purchase products that are made with recycled post-consumer waste.
- Before buying new, look for good quality used items. Outlets that sell used goods are listed on pages 30-36.
- Buy locally-or regionally-made products. This reduces transportation costs and supports the local economy.

A series of six brochures on how you can help the environment at home is available by writing to Saskatchewan Environment and Public Safety at the address on the back page.

Two Symbols to Watch For

You can help the environment by purchasing recycled products — products made from waste rather than virgin materials.

There are two symbols now being used to differentiate between two aspects of recycling.

The symbol to the right indicates products which after use are suitable for recycling. It usually appears with the word, "Recyclable".

It is important to note that these products are truly recyclable only when a system exists to collect and recycle them.

The symbol to the right indicates products made with at least some recycled content. It usually appears with the word, "Recycled". The symbol is most useful when it is accompanied by a statement as to the percentage of recycled content.

When buying recycled products, look for brands with high percentages of post-consumer waste. That means that the recycled waste has been used by consumers and is not scrap from the manufacturing process that is normally recycled.

Since some products are both recycled and recyclable, they may bear both symbols.

Look for the EcoLogo

The federal government's Environmental Choice program issues "EcoLogo" licenses to companies with products that meet certain environmental criteria. To the end of 1990, 41 products were certified to carry the EcoLogo. They include several brands of cloth diapers, re-refined motor oil, water-based paints, cellulose insulation, zinc-air batteries, heat recovery ventilators, cellulose insulation, recycled plastic products and a variety of recycled paper products.

Guidelines will soon be ready for the following product categories: laundry, hand dishwashing and dishwasher detergents, sanitary paper from recycled paper, energy efficient major appliances and lamps, composting systems, alternative fuels, non-rechargeable batteries and water conservation products.

Recycled Products Available Here:

As consumers, we determine the amount of recycling that gets done. The more products we buy made with recycled materials, the more markets we create for recycled goods.

Here is a list of outlets where you can buy recycled goods. It is by no means a comprehensive list. If you know of other products or outlets, we'd like to hear from you.

Note: You can also help the environment by buying unbleached paper products.

SARCAN Recycling: Our Province-wide Collection System

Collection of recyclable beverage containers began only three years ago when Saskatchewan Environment and Public Safety contracted with the Saskatchewan Association of Rehabilitation Centres to start SARCAN Recycling.

Since 1988, SARCAN has expanded its service three times, each time adding a new material to be collected for recycling. It operates more than 65 collection depots in communities across the province which employ more than 160 disabled people.

Between 1988 and 1990, SARCAN collected for recycling more than 3,000 tonnes of aluminum cans, 470 tonnes of glass bottles and 860 tonnes of PET plastic bottles.

The following non-refillable beverage containers can be returned to SARCAN for refund and recycling.

All sizes of:

- aluminum cans
- non-refillable glass bottles
- plastic (PET) bottles

From:

- all alcoholic beverages and carbonated soft drinks distributed in Saskatchewan

Collection depots are listed on the next page.

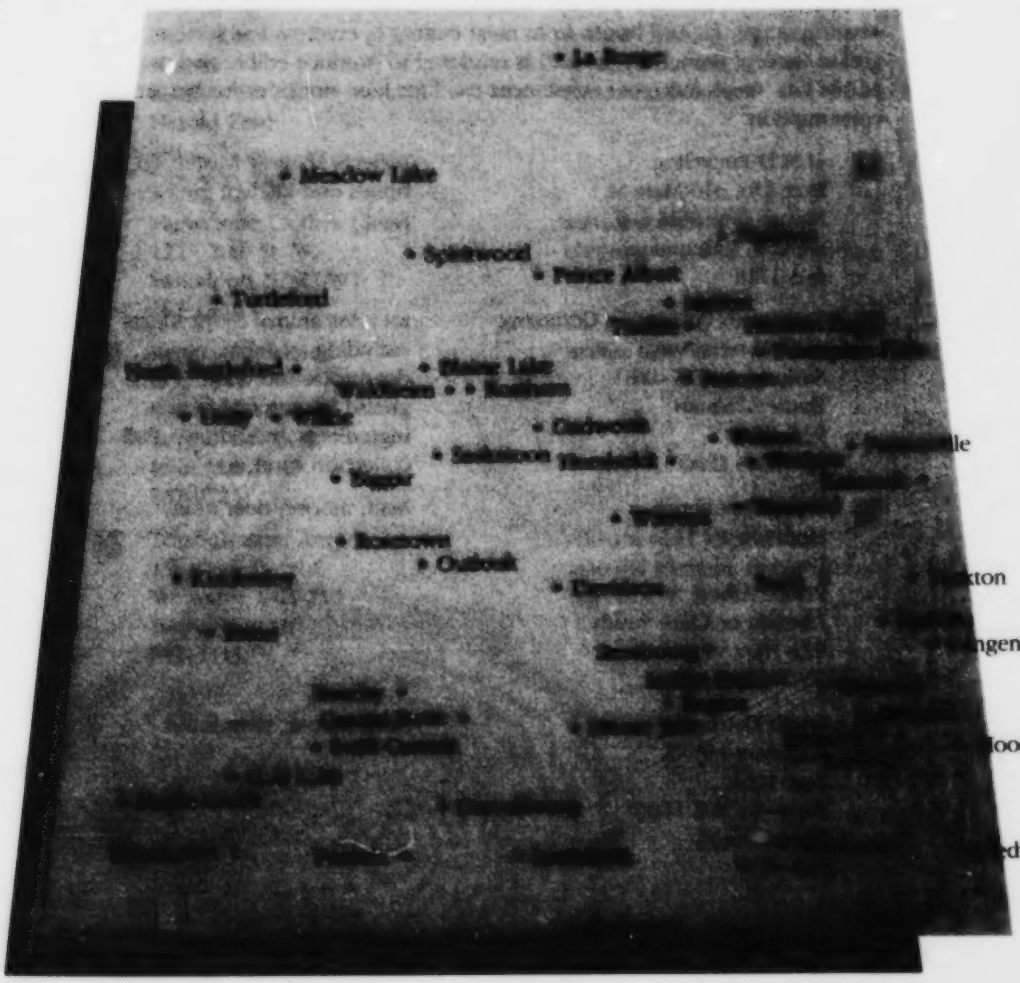
SARCAN Locations



Saskatchewan Recyclers

We strive to include all recyclers in Saskatchewan but may have missed some. If we have, please use the listing form at the back of the directory to let us know. A listing in this directory does not imply recommendation or endorsement by Saskatchewan Environment and Public Safety. We reserve the right to remove or add listings, and to edit information provided by a company or organization.

Phone ahead for hours of operation, minimum quantities accepted and desirable condition of recyclable materials.

Animal Products

Abattoir waste, fat and bones from meat cutting operations and kitchen grease (except French fry grease) is rendered to produce edible and non-edible fats, meal and other substances used for feed stocks or for human consumption.

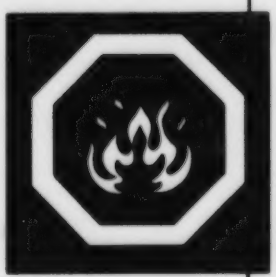
Waste Dangerous Goods

Some waste substances that are recyclable are considered waste dangerous goods. These include gases, flammable liquids, flammable solids, oxidizing substances and organic peroxides, poisonous and infectious substances, corrosive substances and miscellaneous dangerous goods.

Recyclable waste batteries, solvents and petroleum products fit into the waste dangerous goods category. The Dangerous Goods Transportation Regulations cover the transportation and handling of all these materials, except for those that are sold by retail stores as consumer commodities for household use.



However, consumer commodities do not include:

a) a wet, acid-filled or alkali-filled electric storage battery,

b) acid or alkali battery fluid,

c) a nitrocellulose-based product other than a cosmetic,

d) a pyrophoric liquid, solid, metal or alloy,

e) engine starting fluid containing a flammable gas,

f) explosives other than safety explosives, or

g) fire extinguishers.

If you have waste dangerous goods that can't be recycled, don't throw them in the garbage or pour them on the ground or down the drain: save them for your community's hazardous goods pick-up or drop-off days.

If you are a small business or institution, who happens to have more than the quantities of waste dangerous goods listed in the Transportation section below, you are required to be registered as a consignor and carrier or to hire a registered carrier to transport the material to a registered recycler. Registration is undertaken through Saskatchewan Environment and Public Safety.

Transportation

Quantities of waste dangerous goods that can be transported without using a waste manifest are:

- Solid waste — less than 5 kilograms
- Liquid waste — less than 5 litres
- PCB waste — less than 500 grams
- Miscellaneous waste — less than 100 parts per million of a designated substance that is hazardous to the environment.

If you need to transport dangerous waste in quantities more than those listed above you must get a waste manifest from Saskatchewan Environment and Public Safety and have the substance transported by a registered carrier.

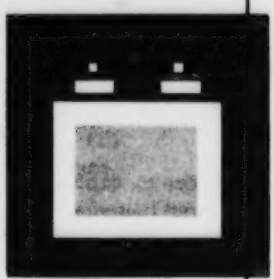
A waste manifest indicates the name, class, packing group and product identification of the waste and must accompany the shipment at all times until it reaches its destination.

Handling

Shippers, carriers and receivers of waste dangerous goods are considered to be handlers and must be properly trained and registered with Saskatchewan Environment and Public Safety.

Registration ensures that these wastes are handled in an environmentally appropriate manner.

All firms listed under Batteries and Petroleum Products on pages 28 and 29 are registered to carry and receive, or to ship, carry and receive waste dangerous goods. Battery recyclers are issued with permits that specify the number of batteries they can have on their sites at any one time.



Waste battery and petroleum product recyclers are listed on the next two pages.

Batteries

Old batteries are recycled to reclaim their elemental lead. Reclaimed lead is then used to manufacture new batteries or other items requiring lead.

Buy "Used" and Help the Environment

Buying second-hand furniture, appliances, clothing, building materials and auto parts is a good way of "reusing".

The outlets listed below were taken from the Yellow Pages of Saskatchewan phone books. There are lots of other places where you can find, buy and sell used items: auctions, flea markets, garage sales, antique stores, classified ads and relatives' and friends' basements and garages.

When buying used goods, as with new, be sure that the item will last over time. Good quality manufacture and materials will give you years of satisfaction and take less from the environment. Ask for a warrantee from the seller before you buy a used major appliance.
